TO THE MOST POPULAR YOUNG LADY

IN CRITTENDEN AND LIVINGSTON COUNTIES THE PRESS
WILL GIVE A BEAUTIFUL BEDROOM SUIT OF FURNITURE.

A VOTING CONTEST TO MAKE THE DECISION.

Who is the most popular young lady in Crittenden and Livingston counties?

This will be determined by a voting contest conducted by THE CRITTENDEN PRESS.

To the young lady receiving the highest number of votes the PRESS will present a lovely bedroom suit of furniture valued at Fifty Dollars.

Every young lady in Crittenden and Livingston counties is eligible to enter the contest. Of course every one has friends among the young ladies. Select your favorite and work for her. Begin now and keep her at the head of the column.

The suit of furniture was purchased from Boston & Walker, of this city. The firm has made a special order, and on its arrival the suit will be placed on exhibition at the furniture store, where it will remain until the close of the contest.

The PRESS will conduct the contest in a fair and most impartial manner.

The voting has already begun.

The contest will close at 4 o'clock in the afternoon of Tuesday, December 24th. The following rules will govern the contest. Read them carefully:

RULES OF CONTEST.

- (1) Every young lady residing in Crittenden and Livingston counties is eligible to enter the contest. No married ladies can enter the contest.
- (2) Every $1.00 paid on subscription to the PRESS entitles the subscriber to four votes in the contest. Every 25 cent subscription entitles the subscriber to one vote.
- (3) A contestant must reside in either Crittenden or Livingston county. The voter may reside anywhere in the United States.
- (4) No restrictions are placed on the voter, except that all votes must be cast on ballots provided by THE PRESS for use in said contest.
- (5) The voter may pay all of his arrearages, and may pay his subscription as many years in advance as he may desire, and for each dollar so paid, receive a ticket entitling the holder to four votes in the contest.
- (6) As received the ballots will be placed in a locked box kept in the PRESS office for that purpose. This box will be opened every Wednesday morning, and the ballots counted. The next day's issue of the PRESS will contain the standing of each candidate. The report will appear each week.

(7) The last count before the close of the contest will be made on WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 19th. The ballot-box will then be locked, the key given to some reputable citizen for safe keeping, and the box remain unopened until the close.

(8) The contest will be closed at 4 o'clock TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 24th.

(9) Immediately after the close a committee of three reputable and disinterested citizens will take charge of the ballot-box, open and count the ballots, and determine the winner in the contest.

(10) The contest will be conducted in a most impartial manner and these rules will be strictly observed. Those interested should read them carefully.

COUNTY FINANCES.

Financial Statement Shows the County Out of Debt.

The finances of the county are in a splendid condition. The county is out of debt and there is a surplus on hand of $450. This speaks well for administration of county judge Rochester. Much credit is also due to county clerk Woods.

There was an error in the statement last week. The balance due from 1900 levy as shown by sheriff's settlement should have been $75.00 instead of $7,800. In order to correct this error we re-publish the latter part of the statement, and also the recapitulations:

sheriff, which sum deducted from the above leaves total claims unpaid this amount $3,300 00
To which add for two county bonds of $500 each 1,00 00

Total indebtedness $ 9,300 00

RESOURCES.

A conservative estimate for the county levy made for 1901 (which is now being collected) will net this amount 9,775 00
Balance due from 1900 levy as shown by sheriff's settlement 75 00

Total $ 9,850 00

Which will leave a surplus of this sum, $450, over and above all claims, bonds, etc to date (exclusive of any delinquent tax that may have been collected by the sheriff).

All of which is respectfully submitted

RECAPITULATIONS.
For roads, $ 2,682 94
For salaries, 2,217 70
For bridges, 802 84
For board health and results, 845 00
For insurance, 373 50
For public printing, etc., 71 00
For poor and paupers, 1,336 94

The points he made against Schley were that the Colon bombardment was useless, the range being 11,500 feet; that no attempt was made to destroy the batteries at Cienfuegos; that on the day of the retrograde movement it would have been possible to coal the battleships at sea, though it was not possible from 8 a. m. of May 25 to 8 or 9 a. m. May 26; and that the Brooklyn at the time of the "loop" came within 100 yards of the Texas.

GOLD DISCOVERED

In Livingston County.—A Novel Plan of Electioneering.

Smithland, Sept. 30.—The news was received from the lead and the mines which are being opened near Cumberland river, nine miles from this city, that gold has been discovered. The company developing the mines is from Pittsburg, Pa. A silver mine was operated near there several years ago.

The Democratic nominees for the various county offices in Livingston county have decided on a novel plan of electioneering before the November election. Beginning in October the candidates will visit each voting precinct in a body and make speeches. They will be accompanied by a brass band.

Thomas Clements, one of the oldest citizens of Carrsville, Livingston county, is dead.

The Farmers' Institute, which will be held at Hampton Friday and Saturday, Oct. 11th and 12th, will attract one of the largest crowds ever assembled in that part of the county. An interesting program has been arranged, and the meeting, at which the great subject of farming will be discussed from many different standpoints, will no doubt prove of great benefit to Livingston county farmers. Commissioner of Agriculture, Ion B. Nall, will be present and deliver an address on "The Farmers' Institute," and the farmers of the county are making preparations for a grand time.

Osteopathy as a Profession.

Miss Ella Gardner, Cumberland Presbyterian missionary in Japan, says: "Osteopathy has done so much for me that were I choosing a secular vocation for a life work I certainly would choose it; and were it not for the time and money required to acquire the knowledge I would like to have it as a help in my work in the mission field."

The practitioner of osteopathy finds himself in possession of skill that the world is demanding, and he possesses and for several years will continue to possess, a natural monopoly of this skill. The unique nature of this skill whereby he effects cures in diseases curable by other means, together with the scarcity of men and women possessing the new power of healing, causes osteopathy to rank first among the professions in respect to pecuniary remuneration.

In point of honor and honorableness, osteopathy ranks co-equal with the other intellectual professions. From all the above causes, osteopathy is growing rapidly by the constant addition to the ranks of men and women from every walk of life, and especially from the ranks of college men and women. To these osteopathy offers a wide-open door.

GOV "BOB" MARRIED.

Tells Some Stories and Bits of Philosophy Suggested Thereby.

Ex-Gov. Robert L. Taylor, of Tennessee, and Mrs. Alice Hall, of Montgomery, Ala., were married last week. While at the Galt House in Louisville Thursday a Courier-Journal reporter asked him to tell him about his marriage.

"About my marriage? Well, my boy," said genial "Bob" Taylor, former Governor of Tennessee, as he grasped the reporter's hand, "you don't know, it now, I reckon, but most probably you'll know it some day, that a man just married is like the farmer's lad the calf ran over—he's got nothing to say."

"You see, it was this way. I'd been a scrapin' my wing about that good lookin' young widow down in Montgomery for quite a spell, but I didn't seem to be doing any good for myself. Then I heard that she and her father and mother were going to California for a long trip. Well, sir, I just picked up my things and landed them smack in 'Tuescloosa' without a stop. You know a fellow can do a good many things when he has to."

The Governor's face took on a most serious expression.

"I jst had to. These accidents of travel, you know, including the chief accident of some California fellow spiking my trail when I wasn't there, were too strong for Bob Taylor. I read over that old lecture of mine where I told the story 'bout the farmer who married unhappily. You know he had a quarrel with his wife and went down in the barn determined to hang himself. He got a blind bridle and fastened himself up safely to a rafter. When he was about dead Uncle Ephraim happened along and cut him down. By and bye the farmer came back to life, and turned fiercely on the old darkey."

"Don't you know, Ephraim, that in another minute I should have been walking the golden streets of paradise and grasping the diamond doorknob of the house where all my old dead friends live."

"Humph!" sniffed Ephraim, "and a nice fix you'd be in, lookin' fer diamond doorknobs wearin' a blind bridle, wouldn't you?"

"Well, sir," said the Governor, "I read that over and I thought it over all the way down on the train but I reckoned I'd a whole lot better take a chance on having to hunt for the diamond doorknobs wearin' a blind bridle in paradise than accept the certainty of running about down here on earth like a string halted old mule with a little bit of me in Tennessee and the most of me out in California. I ain't big enough to cover such a long stretch of ground, honest."

"I did the only thing possible. I explained to them that I was opposed to having myself split up that way, and at last they gave in. Now we're here—that's all there is to it."

"Oh I am doing nothing in particular except working on my new lecture. It is to be called 'Life on the Old Plantation.' It compares rural life with life in the cities, and tells the advantages of rural life, and of course I tell a few stories to illustrate the points. It will be ready pretty soon and then I will start out to try it. I'll be in Louisville some time during the winter."

"Speaking of reporters," now," said the governor, "and not to be personal, when I get a newspaper man's card I always think of that story about the Tennessee preacher."

"One Tuesday morning his wife presented him with a fine, lustrous hair. Wednesday, in celebration of the event, the congregation gave the worthy man a purse of $100. It was an open question in the congregation, which was the more acceptable, the boy or the money. One wag started it with a bet that the parson was more joyful over the money than the boy. Well, sir, the whole church took it up. By Thursday there wasn't a person in the town who had not risked something on one side or the other. Excitement ran high.

"Then some level-headed fellow put a temporary damper on it by asking, 'How are we going to decide?' An ingenious man suggested that whichever gift the parson mentioned, first on the following Sunday shall be taken as the most precious. If he thanked the Lord for the boy and then for the money, the backers of filial love won, but if money came first in the prayer of thanks, then the worldly wise got the coin.

"Sunday came and the church was crowded. On the right of the center aisle sat the backers of filial love, on the left were the believers of money love. The prayer of thanks began. The old pastor thanked his Master for the many blessings enjoyed, for the prosperity of the church, for the recovery of the sick, etc., and finally 'Oh Lord, I thank thee—the people bent forward, intensely listening—I thank Thee, O Lord, for Thy most timely succor.'

"And they called the bet a draw. "And that's what I think when I get a newspaper man's card. I thank the Lord for this most timely sucker."

"Why, you ain't going are you?" said the Governor. You must wait, anyhow, until I order up the drinks. Don't crush the mint in mine, please"—this to the waiter.

"And now, my boy, coming back to the subject of my marriage, it's not going to be like that of another old farmer I knew."

"He was lying on his deathbed and the doctor, an old friend, bent over him."

"I'm sorry, Jim, old man," he said, "I hate to tell you but there is no hope, absolutely none. In a very few minutes you must prepare to meet the King of Terrors."

"The dying man looked up, smiling: 'Is that all, Jack; don't worry; I'm not afraid. Why, man, don't you know that for forty years I've been living with the Queen of Terrors?'"

The waiter returned. "Here's luck," said the Governor.

"And, my boy," this with a most serious face and twinkling eye, "you understand, I was never interviewed in my life."

And the reporter understood too.

His Last Address

President McKinley's Memorable Speech at Buffalo. Words That Will Ring Through Time. Progress and Prosperity Perpetuated Through Pacific Policy—The True Basis of National Greatness.

On the Pan-American exposition grounds at Buffalo, Thursday, September 5, transpired an event the memory of which will linger ever in the minds of men. The day preceding that on which President McKinley received the fatal wound at the hands of an anarchist assassin, the nation's foremost citizen and statesman spoke to the people in words that will live their impress upon the pages of American history. In them the world will read the promptings of a great heart and the logic of a master mind. The words of the lamented president would seem to have been uttered under the dawning consciousness of his coming end, so full of inspiration were they. President McKinley was introduced by President Milburn, of the exposition, and was received by the vast audience with tumultuous enthusiasm, upon the subsidence of which he spoke as follows:

President McKinley's Address.
"I am glad to be again in the city of Buffalo and exchange greetings with her people, to whose generous hospitality I am not a stranger, and with whose good will I have been repeatedly and signally honored. Today I have additional satisfaction in meeting and giving welcome to the foreign representatives assembled here, whose presence and participation in this exposition have contributed in so marked a degree to its interests and success."

"To the commissioners of the Dominion of Canada and the British colonies, the French colonies, the republics of Mexico and of Central and South America, and the commissioners of Cuba and Porto Rico, who share with us in this undertaking, we give the hand of fellowship and felicitate with them upon the triumphs of art, science, education and manufacture which the old has bequeathed to the new century."

Timekeepers of Progress.
"Expositions are the timekeepers of progress. They record the world's advancement. They stimulate the energy, enterprise and intellect of the people and quicken human genius. They go into the home. They broaden and brighten the daily life of the people. They open mighty storehouses of information to the student."

"Every exposition, great or small, has helped to some onward step. Comparison of ideas is always educational and as such instructs the brain and hand of man. Friendly rivalry follows, which is the spur to industrial improvement, the inspiration to useful invention and to high endeavor in all departments of human activity. It exacts a study of the wants, comforts, and even the whims of the people and recognizes the efficacy of high quality and new prices to win their favor."

"The quest for trade is an incentive to men of business to devise, invent, improve, and economize in the cost of production. Business life, whether among ourselves or with other people, is ever a sharp struggle for success. It will be none the less so in the future. Without competition we would be clinging to the clumsy and antiquated process of farming and manufacture and the methods of business of long ago, and the twentieth would be no further advanced than the eighteenth century. But though commercial competitors we are, commercial enemies we must not be."

Mission of the Exposition.
"The Pan-American exposition has done its work thoroughly, presenting in its exhibits evidences of the highest skill and illustrating the progress of the human family in the western hemisphere. This portion of the earth has no cause for humiliation for the part it has performed in the march of civilization. It has not accomplished everything; far from it. It has simply done its best, and without vanity or boastfulness, and, recognizing the manifold achievements of others, it invites the friendly rivalry of all the powers in the peaceful pursuit of trade and commerce, and will cooperate with all in advancing the highest and best interests of humanity. The wisdom and energy of all the nations are none too great for the world's work. The success of art, science, industry and invention is an international asset and a common glory."

"After all, how near one to the other is every part of the world! Modern inventions have brought into close relation widely separated peoples and made them better acquainted. Geographic and political divisions will continue to exist, but distances have been effaced. Swift ships and fast trains are becoming cosmopolitan. They invade fields which a few years ago were impenetrable. The world's products are changed as never before, and with increasing transportation facilities come increasing knowledge and trade. Prices are fixed with mathematical precision by supply and demand. The world's selling prices are regulated by market and crop reports. We travel greater distances in a shorter space of time and with more ease than was ever dreamed of by the fathers."

Isolation No Longer Possible.
"Isolation is no longer possible or desirable. The same important news is read, though in different languages, the same day in all Christendom. The telegraph keeps us advised of what is occurring everywhere, and the press foreshadows, with more or less accuracy, the plans and purposes of the nations. Market prices of products and of securities are hourly known in every commercial mart, and the investments of the people extend beyond their own national boundaries into the remotest parts of the earth."

"Vast transactions are conducted and international exchanges are made by the tick of the cable. Every event of interest is immediately bulletined. The quick gathering and transmission of news, like rapid transit, are of recent origin, and are only made possible by the genius of the inventor and the courage of the investor."

"It took a special messenger of the government with every facility known at the time for rapid transit 19 days to go from the city of Washington to New Orleans with a message to Gen. Jackson that the war with England had ceased and a treaty of peace had been signed. How different now."

Achievements of the Telegraph.
"We reached Gen. Miles in Porto Rico by cable and he was able through the military telegraph to stop his army on the firing line with the message that the United States and Spain had signed a protocol suspending hostilities. We knew almost instantly of the first shots fired at Santiago and the subsequent surrender of the Spanish forces was known at Washington within less than an hour of its consummation. The first ship of Cervera's fleet was hardly emerged from that historic harbor when the fact was flashed to our capital, and the swift destruction that followed was announced immediately through the wonderful medium of telegraphy."

"So accustomed are we to safe and easy communication with distant lands that its temporary interruption even in ordinary times results in loss and inconvenience. We shall never forget the days of anxious waiting and awful suspense when no information was permitted to be sent from Peking and the diplomatic representatives of the nations in China, cut off from all communication inside and outside the walled capital, were surrounded by an angry and misguided mob that threatened their lives; nor the joy that thrilled the world when a single message from the government of the United States brought through our minister the first news of the safety of the besieged diplomats."

Progress of a Century.
"At the beginning of the nineteenth century there was not a mile of steam railroad on the globe. Now there are enough miles to make its circuit many times. Then there was not a line of electric telegraph; now we have a vast mileage traversing all lands and all seas. God and man have linked the nations together. No nation can longer be indifferent to any other. And as we are brought more and more in touch with each other the less occasion is there for misunderstanding and the stronger the disposition, when we have differences, to adjust them in the court of arbitration, which is the noblest forum for the settlement of international disputes."

Our Unexampled Prosperity.
"My fellow-citizens, trade statistics indicate that this country is in a state of unexampled prosperity. The figures are almost appalling. They show that we are utilizing our fields and forests and mines and that we are furnishing profitable employment to the millions of workmen throughout the United States, bringing comfort and happiness to their homes and making it possible to lay by savings for old age and disability."

"That all the people are participating in this great prosperity is seen in every American community and shown by the enormous and unprecedented deposits in our savings banks. Our duty is the care and security of these deposits, and their safe investment demands the highest integrity and the best business capacity of those in charge of these depositories of the people's earnings."

"We have a vast and intricate business built up through years of toil and struggle, in which every part of the country has its stake, which will not permit of either neglect or of undue selfishness. No narrow, sordid policy will subvert it. The greatest skill and wisdom on the part of the manufacturers and producers will be required to hold and increase it."

"Our industrial enterprises which have grown to such proportions affect the homes and occupations of the people and the welfare of the country. Our capacity to produce has developed so enormously and our products have so multiplied that the problem of more markets requires our urgent and immediate attention."

"Only a broad and enlightened policy will keep what we have. No other policy will get more. In these times of marvelous business energy and gain we ought to be looking into the future, strengthening the weak places in our industrial and commercial systems that we may be ready for any storm or strain."

Prosperity Demands Reciprocity.
"By sensible trade arrangements which will not interrupt our home production, we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus."

"A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities is manifestly essential to the continued healthful growth of our export trade. We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing. If such a thing were possible it would not be best for us or for those with whom we deal. We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor."

"Reciprocity is the natural outgrowth of our wonderful industrial development under the domestic policy now firmly established. What we produce beyond our domestic consumption must have a vent abroad. The excess must be relieved through a foreign outlet, and we should sell everywhere we can, and buy wherever the buying will enlarge our sales and productions, and thereby make a greater demand for home labor."

Exclusive No Longer.
"The period of exclusiveness is past. The expansion of our trade and commerce is the pressing problem. Commercial wars are unprofitable. A policy of good will and friendly trade relations will prevent reprisals. Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are not."

"If, perchance, some of our tariffs are no longer needed for revenue or to encourage and protect our industries at home, why should they not be employed to extend and promote our markets abroad?"

Need of Merchant Marine.
"Then, too, we have inadequate steamship service. New lines of steamers have already been put in commission between the Pacific coast ports of the United States and those on the western coasts of Mexico and Central and South America. These should be followed up with direct steamship lines between the eastern coast of the United States and South American ports."

"One of the needs of the times is direct commercial lines from our vast fields of production to the fields of consumption that we have but barely touched. Next in advantage to having the thing to sell is to have the convenience to carry it to the buyer."

"We must encourage our merchant marine. We must have more ships. They must be under the American flag, built and manned and owned by Americans. These will not only be profitable in a commercial sense; they will be messengers of peace and amity wherever they go."

Must Build Isthmian Canal.
"We must build the Isthmian canal, which will unite the two oceans and give a straight line of water communication with the western coasts of Central and South America and Mexico. The construction of a Pacific cable cannot be longer postponed."

"In the furtherance of these objects of national interest and concern you are performing an important part. This exposition would have touched the heart of that American statesman whose mind was ever alert and thought ever constant for a larger commerce and a truer fraternity of the republics of the new world. His broad American spirit is felt and manifested here. He needs no identification to an assembly of Americans anywhere, for the name of Blaine is inseparably associated with the Pan-American movement which finds this practical and substantial expression, and which we all hope will be firmly advanced by the Pan-American congress that assembles this autumn in the capital of Mexico."

"The good work will go on. It cannot be stopped. These buildings will disappear; this creation of art, and beauty, and industry will perish from sight, but their influence will remain to us."

"Make it live beyond its too short living With praises and thanksgiving."

Victory of Peace, Not War.
"Who can tell the new thoughts that have been awakened, the ambitions fired, and the high achievements that will be wrought through this exposition? Gentlemen, let us ever remember that our interest is in concord, not conflict, and that our real eminence rests in the victories of peace, not those of war. We hope that all who are represented here may be moved to higher and nobler effort for their own and the world's good, and that out of this city may come, not only greater commerce and trade for us all, but, more essential than these, relations of mutual respect, confidence, and friendship, which will deepen and endure."

"Our earnest prayer is that God will graciously vouchsafe prosperity, happiness and peace to all our neighbors and like blessings to all the peoples and powers of earth."

President McKinley.
William McKinley, like Abraham Lincoln, had sprung from the heart of the common people. He was one of those who had taken part in the strife between fraternal states. Out of it he carried no bitterness, but, catching the spirit of the dying Lincoln, his heart grew broad as the union and was filled with love of his fellow-man. He looked forward to the time when America might rejoice in the bravery of all her sons, and when the union, linked heart to heart, would have its strongest bond of perpetuity. He became president, and, notwithstanding his peaceful nature, was destined to be a war president. It became his country's privilege during his administration to end 400 years of cruelty in Cuba, to carry the American flag around the globe and plant it in the Philippines, to penetrate the heart of China and to place the United States on a plane with the powers of the earth in Peking.—Atlanta Constitution (Dem.)

Comparative Ages of Our American Presidents

Theodore Roosevelt, the Youngest Man Who Ever Took the Oath. William Henry Harrison, the Oldest.

WHEN the founders of the republic drafted the constitution that should be the fundamental law of the land they provided that:

"No person except a natural-born citizen, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this constitution, shall be eligible to the office of president; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained the age of 35 years, and been 14 years a resident within the United States."

President Theodore Roosevelt, at 43 years of age, comes nearer the minimum number of years allowed by the constitution than any of the other chief executives. In this connection it is interesting to study the ages of the men who have represented the people at the head of the government, since that historic day when George Washington took the oath to "faithfully execute the office of president of the United States, and to the best of my ability preserve, protect and defend the constitution of the United States," outside the senate chamber of the small federal building in New York city April 30, 1789.

beginning of the end, and a cold contracted at that time resulted in his death one month later, and his death gave place to John Tyler, who assumed the grave responsibilities attendant upon the exalted position at the age of 51 years.

When James K. Polk was inaugurated in 1845 he was but 50 years of age, and was at that time considered almost too young to have reached the age of discretion. He was younger by five years than any other man elected to the presidency up to that time, though President Tyler was but 51 when the death of his superior threw the reins of government into his hands.

Zachary Taylor, the hero of Buena Vista, followed Polk in 1849 at the age of 65, but like President Harrison he did not live to complete his term and died after having been in office but one year and four months, giving place to Millard Fillmore, who was but 50 years of age when he took the oath of office.

Franklin Pierce, who was inaugurated in 1853, was but 49 years of age when he took the oath of office, and was the first president to drop below the age of 50. James Buchanan, who

PRESIDENT THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The Youngest Chief Executive of the American Nation.

Washington was at that time 57 years of age. Washington had at the time of his inauguration been in public life of some sort, either as soldier in the Indian wars, serving as a rule under British officers, or as a civil official in the colony of Virginia since he was 16. He had commanded the American troops through the long war of the revolution, and his unanimous election to the presidency came as a crowning incident in a life almost wholly devoted to the public interests.

John Adams, Washington's successor after he had served two terms and declined a third, was one of the older men elected to the presidency. At the time of his inauguration in 1797 he had passed his sixty-second birthday.

Both Thomas Jefferson and James Madison, who were the next two presidents, were near the average age of presidents at the time of inauguration. When Jefferson took the oath of office in 1801 he was 58 years of age, and the age of Madison when inaugurated eight years later was the same.

James Monroe when inaugurated in 1817 was but one year older than Jefferson and Madison at the time they assumed the reins of government. But in the earlier years of the nation's history 58 seemed to be a favored age for president, and it was at that age that John Quincy Adams took his place in the list of chief executives in 1825.

Before Andrew Jackson realized the height of his ambition and journeyed from the wilds of Tennessee to Washington to take the oath of office in 1829 he had passed the sixty-second milestone in his life, though he lived 16 years longer, eight of which he spent in the executive mansion. President Van Buren followed Jackson to the white house, and was the youngest president the country had had up to that time, being but 55 years of age at the time of his inauguration. He served one term, and at the end of his four years gave place to William Henry Harrison, the oldest man ever elected to the presidency of the American republic, having passed his sixty-eighth birthday before the day of his inauguration in 1841. His inauguration, however, marked the befollowed Pierce in 1857, was the second oldest president the people have ever chosen for a first term, being 66 years of age at the time of his inauguration.

The first of the three martyr presidents, Abraham Lincoln, took up the duties of government at the most crucial time in the nation's history when he was 52 years old. He had served four years, one month and eleven days when an assassin's bullet called Andrew Jackson to the head of the government at the age of 57.

The youngest man who has ever filled the office of president of the United States up to the time President Roosevelt took the oath of the office in Buffalo was Ulysses S. Grant, who was but 47 years of age at the time of his inauguration. During the campaign that resulted in the election of Grant much stress was laid upon his youthfulness by the opposing party, and the voters were never permitted to lose track of the fact that he was younger than any man ever honored with the highest gift in the power of the people.

After eight years Grant gave place to Rutherford B. Hayes, who took the prescribed oath at Washington when he was 54 years old. After four years he in turn gave place to the second of our martyr presidents, James A. Garfield, who was permitted to serve but six and one-half months of the term for which he was elected when his life was cut short by the lunatic Guitau. Chester A. Arthur succeeded Garfield, taking the oath when he was 51 years of age.

The third president to drop below the age of 50 at the time of his inauguration was Grover Cleveland, who took the oath of office as president at the age of 48 the first time, and 56 the second time. Benjamin Harrison was 56 at the time of his inauguration in 1889, and our third martyr president, William McKinley, was 54 when he first took the oath of office a little more than four years ago. His death has now given to the American people the youngest president who has ever ruled over the destinies of this nation, Theodore Roosevelt, at the age of 43.

Of our 28 presidents five were inaugurated after they had passed the sixtieth milestone of their life; 16 of them when they were between 50 and 60 years of age, and five of them before they had reached their fiftieth birthday. WRIGHT A. PATTERSON.

OUR NATIONAL NEEDS

Vice President Roosevelt's Speech at Minneapolis.

Legislation Which Shall Shield Wage-Workers—Justice in Our Dealings with Foreign Countries.

In an address at the state fair grounds, Minneapolis, Monday, September 2, Vice President Roosevelt made some notable declarations which, now that he is president, will have some special interest for the people. In the course of his remarks he paid a high tribute to the character and energy of his hearers, descended, he said, from a race of pioneers which had pushed westward into the wilderness and laid the foundations for new commonwealths. The men with ax, and pick, and plow, who, he said, had pushed to completion the dominion of our people over the American wilderness had shown by their qualities of daring, endurance and far-sightedness that they recognized in practical form the fundamental law of success in American life—the law of worthy work; the law of resolute, high endeavor. Continuing, he said: "It seems to me that the simple acceptance of this fundamental fact of American life will help us to start right in facing not a few of the problems that confront us from without and from within."

"We cannot possibly do our best work as a nation unless all of us know how to act in combination as well as to act individually for himself. This acting in combination can take many forms, but of course its most effective form must be when it comes in shape of law, that is, of action by the community as a whole through the law-making body."

"No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to where our legislation shall stop in interfering between man and man, between interest and interest. All that can be said is that it is highly undesirable on the one hand to weaken individual initiative, and, on the other hand, that in a constantly increasing number of cases we shall find it necessary in the future to shackle cunning as in the past we have shackled force."

Legislation for Wage-Workers.
"It is not highly desirable, but necessary, that there should be legislation which shall carefully shield the interests of wage-workers and which shall discriminate in favor of the honest and humane employer by removing the disadvantage under which he stands when compared with unscrupulous competitors who have no conscience and will do right only under fear of punishment."

"Nor can legislation stop with what are termed labor questions. The vast individual and corporate fortunes, the vast combinations of capital which have marked the development of our industrial system, create new conditions and necessitate a change from the old attitude of the state and nation toward prosperity."

There was, he contended, but the scantiest justification for most of the outcry against men of wealth, as such, and it ought to be unnecessary, he said, to state that any appeal which finally entails the possibility of lawlessness and violence is an attack upon the fundamental properties of American citizenship.

As to Foreign Relations.
As to our relations with foreign powers Vice President Roosevelt said that our nation, while first of all seeing to its own domestic well-being, must not shrink from playing its part among the great nations of the world.

"Our duty," he said, "may take many forms in the future as it has taken many forms in the past. Nor is it possible to lay down a hard and fast rule for all cases. We must ever face the fact of our shifting national needs, of the always changing opportunities that present themselves. But we may be certain of one thing, whether we wish it or not, we cannot avoid hereafter having duties to do in the face of other nations. All that we can do is to settle whether we shall perform those duties well or ill."

He counseled courtesy and respect in all dealings with any foreign power with whom the government might come in contact. On this point he added:

"Let us make it evident that we intend to do justice. Then let us make it equally evident that we will not tolerate injustice being done to us in return. Let us further make it evident that we use no words which we are not prepared to back up with deeds, and that while our speech is always moderate, we are ready and willing to make it good. Such an attitude will be the surest possible guarantee of that self-respecting peace, the attainment of which is and must ever be the prime aim of a self-governing people."

Must Enforce Monroe Doctrine.
"This is the attitude we must take as regards the Monroe doctrine."

"We do not by this policy intend to sanction any policy of aggression by one American commonwealth at the expense of any other, nor any policy of commercial discrimination against any foreign power whatsoever. Commercially, as far as this doctrine is concerned, all we wish is a fair field and no favor, but if we are wise we shall strenuously insist that, under no pretext whatsoever, shall there be any territorial aggrandizement on American soil by any European power, and this, no matter what form the territorial aggrandizement may take."

The vice president concluded with a discussion of the subject of expansion and a review of what had been accomplished in Cuba and the Philippines toward a free and independent commonwealth of the former, and, "ultimately, a self-governing people" of the latter.

TRAGEDY IN CALDWELL.

Richard Kemp Kills Elbert Matthews Monday Evening.

Monday evening Richard Kemp shot and killed Elbert Matthews in Caldwell county, a short distance from Shady Grove. The men had not been on good terms for some time, and the killing was the result of the bitter feeling existing between them. Kemp had Matthews arrested on some trivial charge and Matthews escaped from the officer and went to the home of Kemp. He met the latter and began shooting. Kemp ran into his residence and secured a shot gun and revolver, returned and began shooting at Matthews. He used his weapon with deadly effect killing Matthews instantly. Both men are farmers and well known in the Shady Grove neighborhood.
The remains of Matthews were taken to Blackford for burial. Kemp gave himself up. Matthews resi-

Saw-Mill Burned.

Thursday morning the saw-mill owned by Mr. Carl Flannery, located on the farm of Mr. Peter Shomaker, five miles north of Marion was destroyed by fire. A portion of the saw rig and one large saw were burned, but Geo. Russell, the engineer, by hard work saved the fine engine. The mill was entirely new and had been in operation but one week. It was perhaps the largest saw-mill in the county. The origin of the fire is unknown. There was no insurance, consequently Mr. Flannery's loss is a severe one. The mill will be rebuilt immediately.

THE CHILDESS.

"I wonder why I shed those tears
When they laid my little dead child away?
After the lapse of weary years
I am glad that I sit alone today;
I can hear his laugh and his glad wild shout.
I can see him still, as he ran about,
And I know the little prayer he used to say.

"I hold his picture to my face
And I fancy I feel his hand again
As it creeps into mine, and he takes his place
On my knee, as he did in the fair days when

The world and the fates were kind to me
And the songs I heard were but songs of glad,
And I stirred the envy of other men.

"His days were only days of joy,
Happy, he shouted the hours away;
He was glad with the gleam of a careless boy.
He laughed as only the innocent may;
He never was doomed to weary fret,
He never looked back with vain regret
At the close of a sorrowful day.

"I keep the little clothes he wore,
I treasure the shoes that cheered his feet.
The way was smooth that he traveled over,
The flowers that bloomed at his sides
were sweet;
The winds that blew through his curly hair
Had blown out of peaceful realms and fair—
There were no grim foes that he had to meet.

"I wonder why I shed those tears
When they crossed his hands and laid him away?
After the lapse of weary years
I am glad that I sit alone today;
He knew life's gladness, but not its woe,
And I have his memory, and I know
The sweet little prayer he used to say."

THE TANGLE.

By Mary L. Pendered.

ALISON COLE was wondering whether she might not be able to slip away without offending her hostess, when a voice said: "Miss Cole, may I introduce Mrs. Kynaston to you?" and in a moment she was face to face with the one woman in the world she most desired to avoid. It had come upon her so suddenly that she almost lost her presence of mind, and a leap of color dyed her face so richly that she was painfully aware of it. The strange flutter of her heart and the mist in her eyes prevented her for a second from either seeing or hearing distinctly the individual who was smiling and speaking to her—a tall, plump woman of middle age, well-dressed, comely, with soft, shining eyes and pretty teeth.

"I have long wished to know you, Miss Cole," she was saying, "for I have heard so much about you, and I love your pictures so well."

"You are very kind," Alison murmured faintly. "So this was the woman!" She had met her at last, after 15 years.

Yes; it was 15 years since she had played, with James Kynaston, in the commonest of all tragedies, where love is the hero, circumstance the villain, conscience the stalking specter. It seemed a long while—15 years—when she had passed through Heaven and hell in six months, entering with wings and coming out a strange chrysalis that was still alive and able to notice vaguely the other curious, wingless things about it. That state had not lasted either. She had moved, crawled, walked and learned to feel again, looking back on the past as on a previous incarnation, with but a faint sense of identity. Now—a great cloud of time was lifted; the old days were painted before her in a sudden glare of light. She shrank and trembled.

"You can't think what pleasure you have given me over and over again," Mrs. Kynaston went on, gazing with frank admiration at the pale face in front of her; "those two last pictures of yours in the Academy—The Way In and The Way Out—are my favorites of all. They are exquisite! The expression of the woman's eyes in the one where her lover is seen going away in the distance haunted me for days. How can you put such pathos and life into mere paint and canvas? It is wonderful! But I do not marvel so much now that I have seen you."

Her eyes begged a question, but Alison could not ask it. She could only mutter: "It is very nice of you."

Mrs. Kynaston, smiling sweetly, continued:

"Your face tells me plainly that you know what suffering is, and that you are full of sympathy for those who suffer. Am I not right?"

"I—it is a question of art, you know," faltered Miss Cole, trying not to meet the earnest eyes fixed on her. "And heart. But it is all amazing. I have so often longed to be clever."

"Never do that!" Alison exclaimed, impetuously, adding, in a lower key: "Believe me, it is undesirable."

"Undesirable! To be clever! You cannot mean it, Miss Cole. I would give the world to have your genius, your brain. They would have brought me a good deal of happiness that I have missed. But you will not understand—I can't explain."

Alison felt cold. The woman's voice, warm and sweet as it was, had become a stinging pain to her; its note of sadness wrung her heart. When she spoke again her voice was husky.

"You are, I fear, under a delusion," she said. "The clever and talented woman is one of nature's mistakes, a freak that had better, perhaps, be strangled at her birth. Too often she misses all that is worth having in life. For the simple, ordinary woman the feast is spread, everything is prepared. Her notes are all soft and low, in harmony with the normal key; the melody of her fate flows easily. It is otherwise with the woman who finds herself pitched too high for the usual voice."

"You mean that she seldom marries happily; that, as so few men are her superiors, she rarely meets one who can dominate her, as a husband should. I have often thought of that," was the quick reply.

"And he told me she was not responsive!" thought Alison. She said aloud, choosing her words carefully, for the ice was thin between safety and betrayal: "That flatters the clever woman too much. Her superlativeness is a thing not proven. Probably the difficulty lies less often in her failure to find the superior man than in her failure to please him when she has found him!"

Mrs. Kynaston looked at her a moment before replying.

"You can never have failed to please any man or woman," she observed decisively, "so don't tell me that. But you are modest, as all large-minded and great-hearted people are. It has been a real pleasure to meet you, Miss Cole, and I have thoroughly enjoyed our chat. If you will only come to see me, I should be more than delighted. Will you? My days are first and second Tuesdays; and if you could manage to call early, we might have a lovely talk before anyone else comes."

Alison controlled a shudder. Call on James Kynaston's wife—perhaps meet him there, in the home that would have been hers but for the accident of having arrived late upon the scene of his life. She smiled, and wanted to scream.

"You are most kind, but I have little time—I rarely call on anyone," she protested lamely. Mrs. Kynaston came to the rescue, in quick recognition of her embarrassment.

"I quite understand. Of course I ought not to have asked you. Your time is so valuable and you must have so many intellectual and interesting friends who all want you badly. Besides, I know what constant labor art of any kind demands. My husband never has a minute to spare. It was the thought of him that made me venture to invite you; for though I am humdrum, he is not, as you are doubtless aware, and I believe you would enjoy a chat with him. Especially as he admires you so much."

"(My God! How can I get away from her?) thought Alison in despair. She felt her face must blurt the truth to the eyes that watched it with such absorbed interest.)

"Really—you are—it is very kind of him to say so," she stammered.

"O, he has never said so in words. I know from his voice when he mentions you, and from his face when anyone else speaks of you," was the prompt reply. And then there was a moment's pause. For all the world, Alison could not have spoken. Mrs. Kynaston leaned forward and took her hand. They were sitting in the deep bow of a window, behind half-drawn curtains.

"May I make a confession to you?" she pleaded softly, "and beg your forgiveness? I feel that I must now, and clear my conscience. Years ago—about 15 years now—that makes us both seem old, doesn't it? But you will always be young. Well, I had not been married long, and I was a silly goose, dreadfully in love with my husband, and continually tormenting myself about him. The fact is, I took it into my head to be jealous—frantically jealous—of you, Miss Cole. I thought," she stopped. Alison had drawn her hand away instinctively.

"Now you are vexed, and no wonder! But you will forgive me. Your kind eyes tell me you could not be hard on anyone. And I was only a very young wife. You know how blindly girls adore, how full of romance they are, and—rubbish. Then some one came to me and said that James—Mr. Kynaston—had been seen with you at a certain place when he had told me he was going somewhere else. I lost my head, like the poor fool I was, and taxed him with deceiving me. He seemed confused, grew angry and blustered, as he had never done before, and so we had our first quarrel. Don't you think there was some excuse for me—just a fraction? For though you were not famous then, I had heard how lovely and attractive you were, and could see that he admired you. It only needed that horrid bit of scandal to fan the spark into a flame. I know I ought not to have believed it, but I was a foolish, credulous girl, and—anyhow, I was very soon ashamed of my jealousy and suspicion. Can you ever forgive me for wronging you so?"

Alison tried to speak, but her lips trembled fatuously. She could only murmur:

"Please, please don't talk like that. There is nothing to forgive—I mean—you did not do wrong—you did not know me."

"That was just the reason," declared the other woman, earnestly; "if I had known you it would all have been different—O, quite different. It is the thought of your noble life, devoted to art and to works of charity, that shames me now. I wonder how I could have been so idiotic, so wicked, as to doubt your goodness. I've long wanted to tell you this. I've written letters to you and torn them up over and over again. For, though I wished to confess and apologize, it seemed an insult even to mention such a suspicion of you, to own that I ever could have thought you the kind of a woman to—"

"If your face were not so sweet I should never have dared to speak of this at all; but your very purity shames one into confession, and—"

"I must go," Alison rose abruptly. Her lips were dry, her voice sounded harsh. "I must go. You make me—"

She sought an impressive word, and could find only the tame one, "uncomfortable." Its inaptitude made her blush, nervously.

"One moment. I must tell you that, at least, I have been punished for my sin against you—punished enough, I think—much as I deserved. For such jealousy as mine was—an illness, an agony, a fire that threatened to burn my very life away. What I suffered! I cannot speak of it, even now, without feeling sick and faint."

There was a long and painful silence. The atmosphere seemed too heavy to breathe; each could hear the other panting softly. At last Alison said, with a jerk:

"You feel things strongly."

"Yes, and so do you. That is why I know you can understand and forgive me. Sometimes I wonder what I should have done if"—her voice fell to a whisper—"if I had found out that—that my suspicions were true, and he—loved someone else. I—the mere thought of it almost kills me."

A violent shudder passed through her frame, and the happy, comely face was convulsed into age and plainness for a moment. Her next words came with a gasp that was like a sob.

"How weak and silly you must think me, Miss Cole. But you are responsible for this schoolgirlish outburst. Does not everyone you meet wish to confide in you? Can anybody resist the spell of your sympathy? If I might only have you for a friend! But that is asking too much, I know. I should love you with my uninteresting affection. Yet if you ever need a trustworthy friend, if I can do anything to atone for having once wronged you in my thoughts, nothing could make me happier."

She took the limp hand formally extended to her. "Good-bye," she said, with a winking smile of apology and kindness still lingering about her flexible mouth. "Good-bye, I do hope you'll be happy, you deserve to be."

Alison shrank as if she had received a blow. She recovered herself quickly, however, and asked, on a sudden impulse: "Are you happy?" The other woman dimpled into a laugh.

"Come and see me with my children. You will not need to ask them."

Out in the air Alison Cole reeled at first, then set off as fast as she could walk, under a drizzling rain, of which she was scarcely conscious. Her thoughts whirled deliciously.

"At last—at last we've met! Rivals and enemies, by all the laws of convention, yet two women who could have loved, and understood, and helped each other. She wanted to be 'friends'—think of it! And my face, that told her so much, did not tell her the truth, though I writhed before her. Thank God for that! Thank God she can still be happy."

She pulled up on the curb and hailed a hansom driving towards her. But someone had already claimed it. The cabman pulled up a few paces off, then drove away with another fare. Alison walked on.

"First come, first served." So all through life! She laughed at this prosaic illustration of a theme for tragedy. "The first, not the fittest! Because he met her before I crossed his path—and there is nothing to tell us what the real face of love will be like when we see it. We are made ignorant, and then punished for our ignorance? Is it fair—is it just?"

"Ah, yes," she thought; "perhaps things are leveled more than they seem to our tangled notions of justice. She has her husband, her home, and her children, while I am alone and have nothing. But I have never been jealous—she has. I have always been sure of him—she has not. If she has his children and sits at his table, has I not shared all the romance of his life? Do we not sit at the feast of memory together, he and I—always together. So the sun balances out! And why should she not get her heart's desire?" Mrs. Kynaston was wondering, too, on her way home. She felt sure that dear Miss Cole had a story—a secret sorrow which she longed to share. And she told her husband so—Black and White.

The Duke to a Quick.

"Sir: I have received your letter and the box of salves, etc., which you have sent me. This last will be returned to you by the coach of Monday. I beg you to accept my best thanks for your attention. I think that you and I have some reason to complain of the editors of newspapers. One of them thought proper to publish an account of me, that I was affected by a rigidity of the muscles of the face. You have decided that the disorder must be the douloureux, for which you send me your salve as a remedy. I have no disorder in my face. I am affected by the lumbago or rheumatism in my loins, shoulders, neck, and back, a disorder to which many are liable who have passed days and nights exposed to the weather in bad climates. I am attended by the best medical advisers in England, and I must attend to their advice. I cannot make use of salves sent to me by a gentleman, however respectable, of whom I know nothing, and who knows nothing of the case excepting what he reads in the newspapers."—A letter of the duke of Wellington.

Hard Luck.

She—Yes, it is true I jilted him—then he went west and died of liver complaint.

He—There is something unusually sad in a denouncement like that.

He—You know very well I wanted a dozen kisses against ten kisses and won!
She—Oh! but kisses, you know— He—(firmly)—Kisses should be paid just as religiously as any other debt.
She—(thoughtfully)—Just the same as a note.
He—(firmly)—Or a check?

Wisconsin Farm Lands.
The best of farm lands can be obtained now in Marinette County, Wisconsin, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, at a low price and on very favorable terms. Wisconsin is noted for its fine crops, excellent markets and healthful climate. Why rent a farm when you can buy one much cheaper than you can rent and in a few years it will be your own property. For particulars address: F. A. Miller, General Passenger Agent, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, Chicago.

From Mutton to Money.

There is, or rather was, years ago in this city, a gentleman who did a thriving business in mutton in the market district, and was well known to hundreds of people as a bright and original sort of man. Another man, who had not seen him for nearly 20 years, met him a short time ago, and after inquiries as to his health asked if he was in the same business.

"Oh, no," was the reply. "I'm presiding now."

The man who was inquiring about him was really phased by this answer, and remarked that he presumed it was his ignorance, but he must admit he derived no idea of his business from the statement that the former market man "was presiding."

"Why," he replied, "I mean that I am a president—president of a bank in Cambridge."—Boston Record.

"What! You surely don't mean to say by that you don't owe anyone."

"Far from it. I simply mean that there is no direction I can take that will insure any such exemption, and as a consequence it doesn't pay to hesitate."—Boston Courier.

Autocrat of the Table.

The head waiter at the Cliff house, Manitowish, was given a smother the other night and a fine gold watch. The distinguished official responded appropriately and with dignity to the presentation speech. He then lifted his hand in token that the audience was at an end. Wigg—She is very susceptible to flattery. Wag—It should say so. I once told her she was as sweet as honey, and—would you believe it?—the very next day she had hives.

Bacteria, Not Sin.

New doctrines in bacteriology seem to be sapping the simple faith which has hitherto been the characteristic of our Sunday schools. A youngster stoutly refused to believe that Gehazi became a leper on account of his sins. "No," said he, "there was germs in the clothes."—London News.

The Typewriter Invention.
A statistician has proved that the invention of the typewriter has given employment to 500,000 people, but he fails to state how many cases of weak stomachs and dyspepsia it has induced. All people of sedentary occupation need Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It is a wonderful medicine and helps nature bear the strain which ensues from confinement. It also cures dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation and flatulency. Be sure to try it and you will not be disappointed.

LIFE IN OREGON.

John Cochran Writes an Interesting Letter from the Far West.

SAGINAW, ORE., Sept. 23, 1901.
EDITOR PRESS: If you will allow me a little space in your valuable paper I will try to give your readers an idea of Western Oregon.

I arrived at Cottage Grove, Oregon on the 11th of April, and after a short stay there went north to Saginaw. It was raining when I got here and rained until the middle of June, and then we had some of the nicest weather up until now, but it has set into raining again. The people tell me it will rain until next May or June.

I like Oregon fine through the dry season, but now I can not say that I like it so well. There is lots of work through the dry season, but not so much during the wet weather.

The saw mills give the most of the work to the people. Wages are very good, from $1.50 to $3.00 per day and board is about $4.50 to $5.00 per week.

There are a great many gold and silver mines around here. The Bohemia mines is 45 miles from here. I took a trip up there in August; walked up there and back. Had a good time but did not get any game. There are deer, bear, coppers and such other animals in large numbers.

Oregon is a great fruit country. Apples, grapes, plums and all kinds of berries. This is a great place to grow hops. You can get any kind of garden truck you may want.

I like old Kentucky as well or better than any place I have seen yet. I was in Texas three months. Texas is an all O. K. state. I was in California a month, in the southern part for two weeks, and at San Francisco for two weeks, but I do not like California as well as I do Texas or Oregon.

I see several of the Crittenden county boys are scattered all over the west. I wish them all good luck; hope when they return to Kentucky they will all be rich men.

I could write all day and tell you things about Oregon, but will be glad if these few lines find a place in the PRESS.

I would love to be in Marion this fall, but will not. Will spend the winter in Montana. I will now close. I am a Marion, Crittenden county boy.

John W. Cochran,

HELD TO RANSOM.

An American Missionary Captured by Turkish Brigands.

Miss Ellen M. Stone, the American missionary who is being held by Turkish brigands for a ransom of $150,000, will either be forced to marry one of her captors or will be put to death if the money is not paid. It is stated that the American Board of Foreign Missions will refuse to pay the sum demanded by the robbers.

There is no warrant of law for the expenditure of a single cent of money from the United States Treasury for ransom, and the inference is that the Government's action, if indeed any is taken, will be along diplomatic lines, tending to induce the Bulgarian and Turkish governments to undertake to release the captive.

A correspondent of a Paris paper who visited Miss Stone reports that she is being courteously treated, but that unless the ransom is paid she must choose between death and a robber husband.

The Commoner.

(Mr. Bryan's Paper.)

The Commoner has attained within six months from date of the first issue a circulation of 100,000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the discussion of political, economic and social problems. To the columns of The Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts; and his review of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

The Commoner's regular subscription price is $1.00 per year. We have arranged with Mr. Bryan whereby we can furnish his paper and THE PRESS together for one year for $1.75. The regular subscription price of the two papers when subscribed for separately is $2.00.

What's Your Face Worth?

Sometimes a fortune, but never if you have a sallow complexion, a jaundiced look, moth patches and blotches on the skin, all signs of Liver trouble. But Dr. King's New Life Pills give clear skin, rosy cheeks, rich complexion. Only 25c at H. K. Woods & Co's.

Clipped from the Commoner.

Mr. Taft says the Filipinos have not been given all that he had hoped and desired to give them, but promises more in the future, when the Filipinos are better able to receive and appreciate it. This has a delightfully George Thirlish sound.

After Czolgosz is condemned and executed (the sooner the better) it might be proper to ask the governor of Indiana to surrender the man who is under indictment for aiding in the assassination of Gov. Goebel.

Many rules for the pronunciation of the name of the President's assassin are now going the rounds. The final pronunciation will be "de-a-d!"

The bullet of an anarchist can not overthrow our government, neither can it settle public questions. Our government rests securely on the good will of the people, and public questions will be settled by the intelligence and patriotism of the people.

If the Republicans had any national pride they would not exaggerate the number of anarchists in the United States, but for partisan purposes they try to make it appear that all who oppose Republican policies—nearly half the people—are at heart in sympathy with assassination.

Educational Notes.

The attendance in many districts is rather small this fall.

Too much attention is being paid to the development of the animal nature of the child and not enough to the intellectual development.

Moral: The next generation of Crittenden countyites will be athletic giants instead of thinkers.

E. J. Travis, who is teaching at Bells Mines, says that he will turn out some graduates this term.

Look out for a list of the books in the teachers' library in a few weeks. R. M. Allen.

It Happened in a Drug Store.

"One day last winter a lady came to my drug store and asked for a brand of cough medicine that I did not have in stock," says Mr. O. R. Grandin, the popular druggist of Ontario, New York. She was disappointed and wanted to know what cough preparation I could recommend. I said to her that I could freely recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and that she could take a bottle of the remedy and after giving it a fair trial if she did not find it worth the money to bring back the bottle and I would refund the price paid. In the course of a day or two the lady came back in company with a friend in need of a cough medicine, and advised her to buy a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I consider that a very good recommendation for the Remedy." For sale by H. K. Woods & Co.

Question Answered.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers and grandmothers never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Bileousness. Doctors were scarce and they seldom heard of Appendixitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad, with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. For sale by R. F. Haynes and J. H. Orme.
